By Indigenous, For Indigenous

A Resource for Indigenous Communities working with Western Philanthropy

Western culture doesn't perceive the natural world the way we do. So Indigenous environmental projects don't fit the boxes and agendas of Western philanthropy.

Indigenous people know the Land is alive and has agency. It can heal itself and is telling us how to help it. We need resources for this, but not in boxes that colonize.

We must Stand our Ground for the Land

Download a free copy of guidelines you can use with Western funders who want to support Indigenous environmental projects without colonizing our work, our people, and our Lands.
https://tapestryinstitute.org/standing-our-ground-for-the-land

Because it's time for us to lead.

Developed by the IKhana Fund team
of Indigenous Māori, First Nations,
American Indian, and Tande-Nsenga people.

IKhana Fund is a project of Tapestry Institute.